Tennis is one of the oldest sports in the world. The name 'tennis' is said to have come from the French expression 'tennis' which means take. The player preparing to serve the ball usually called out this word to the receiver at the other end of the court. Tennis started off as an indoor game called court or royal tennis, which used to be played by French and English royalty. It was only in 1873 that 'lawn tennis' (which is popularly played today) was introduced by a British army officer, Major Walter Winfield. Lawn tennis was first played on a court shaped like an hour-glass and divided by a high hung net. It required speed, agility and a great deal of accuracy in hitting the ball. It soon became popular with the English young people.

Shortly after lawn tennis was introduced in Britain, an English officer who was sent on duty to Bermuda took a long supply of balls and rackets. The game became popular, there too. At that time an American girl by the name of Mary Erwin Outerbridge happened to be visiting the island. When she saw the game of tennis being played, she became very enthusiastic about it. Before returning home to New York, she purchased a few rackets and balls and took them with her.

Miss Outerbridge had hoped to interest her friends in the new game, but the other girls did not take to it first. They feared it was not very lady like to leap and dash about the court. However, the boys, especially her brothers enjoyed it tremendously. Gradually, tennis spread throughout United States and Canada.

In 1877, the first lawn tennis championship matches were held at the old Wimbledon grounds near London. A few changes were made in the game during the championship. The court was no longer hour-glass shaped but was rectangular. The net was lowered, and the badminton method of scoring abandoned.

Not long after, tennis began to spread to other countries of the world. Today, it has become popular, a popular sport enjoyed internationally by both the sexes.
